

Arlo and the Gentle Giant Beyond the Wall

By אור שטרנשוס

In a beautiful city surrounded by tall, colorful walls lived a curious boy named Arlo. The walls kept the city safe and cozy, but Arlo always looked up at the clouds and wondered, "What is waiting for us out there, beyond the sky?"

Arlo met his best friend, Ziv. Ziv always carried a large book filled with drawings of rushing rivers, green forests, and mountains covered in white sugar. "The world outside must be full of sweet adventures," Ziv said with a wide, excited smile.

To go on a journey, they needed help. They went to see Skye, the bravest girl in the neighborhood. Skye had invented special "Floaty Belts" with big, colorful balloons that allowed anyone to hop and bounce high over any obstacle.

One morning, they decided to set off. Arlo and Skye fastened their Floaty Belts, took a giant leap, and floated right over the top of the tall wall. "Look!" Skye cheered, "The world is so big and green!"

Suddenly, they saw something amazing. Peeking through the tall trees was a giant creature named Gully. Gully was as big as a house, but he didn't look scary at all. He looked a little sad and confused, trying to reach something high up in the branches.

"Hello there, big friend!" Ziv called out from the ground. He saw that Gully the Giant had accidentally gotten his arm tangled in a mess of thick, climbing vines. Gully had only wanted to save a bright ball stuck in a tree, but now he was stuck too.

Arlo used his Floaty Belt to fly as high as he could. He reached the top vines that were twisting around Gully and began to untangle them one by one. "Don't worry, Gully, we'll help you!" he shouted over the rustling leaves.

Skye saw they needed more strength. She hopped nimbly onto the high branches and used her balloons to pull on the tightest knots. Together, the children and their balloons worked to free Gully from the leafy trap.

As the sun began to set, Arlo and Skye waved goodbye to Gully. They returned home to their city behind the wall, knowing that the world outside was a wonderful place full of new friends, even if those friends were very, very tall.
