

The Breath of the Silver Mist

By אור שטרנשוס

High atop the Frost-Veiled Peaks, where the air was thin and the snow never melted, lived a boy named Renzo. While other children played, Renzo spent his days practicing with a heavy wooden sword. He knew that deep in the valleys below, the Shadow-Walkers were waking up, and someone had to be ready to protect the world from the darkness.

One morning, a girl named Sora arrived at the mountain shrine. She wore a robe the color of a summer lake and moved with the grace of a falling leaf. "The shadows are growing stronger, Renzo," she said softly. "I have mastered the Breath of the Crystal River, but I cannot face the valley alone."

Sora showed Renzo the secret of the Breathing Techniques. "It's not just about strength," she explained, taking a deep, rhythmic breath. "It's about pulling the energy of the world into your lungs." As she exhaled, a shimmering trail of water droplets followed the tip of her practice blade, swirling like a mini-whirlpool.

They descended into the misty woods, where they found a boy named Jin fighting off a pack of shadow-hounds. Jin was a whirlwind of energy, jumping from tree to tree with incredible speed. Sora rushed forward, her water-blade clashing against the shadows to help the exhausted boy.

Jin laughed, a spark of electricity dancing in his eyes. "Thanks for the hand! I'm Jin, master of the Breath of the Thunderous Gale!" He took a sudden, sharp breath, and with a loud crack, he vanished in a blur of yellow light, reappearing instantly to strike down the remaining shadows with a flickering blade.

VILAGE VILLAGE OF ETERNAL TWILIGHT

The three heroes reached the Village of Eternal Twilight, where the sun never seemed to rise. The villagers were hiding in fear as a massive Shadow-Walker, tall as the village gates, loomed over the houses. Renzo gripped his sword, feeling the weight of his responsibility. Jin stepped up beside him, his blade humming with static.

The giant monster lashed out with a claw made of pure darkness. Sora stepped in front of a group of frightened children, drawing a circle in the air with her sword. "Breath of the Crystal River, Fourth Form: Mirror Shield!" A wall of swirling water rose up, blocking the monster's heavy blow.

"Now, Renzo!" Sora shouted. Renzo closed his eyes and remembered his training on the mountain. He inhaled until his lungs felt like they were glowing. "Breath of the Silver Mist, First Form: Hidden Horizon!" Thick, glowing white mist began to pour from his blade, hiding him from the monster's sight.

As the shadows vanished, the first rays of a real sunrise touched the village rooftops. The three friends stood together, watching the golden light. They knew their journey was just beginning, but as long as they breathed together, the world would never have to fear the dark again.